

Why are domestic cats dangerous?

Toxoplasma gondii parasites infect humans with schizophrenia.

Danish researchers have carried out some experiments in this regard and have come up with an unexpected result. It was found that the risk of schizophrenia among domestic cat owners is high.

The toxoplasma gondii, which is present in the body tissues of the muscles of the animal, can infect the cat owner with schizophrenia.

The Toxoplasma gondii parasite can trigger the disease. If the cat is infected and this parasite is in the internal organs and cat tissues, anxiety and willingness toward risks will be observed in the behavior of the animal.
